State Capital Tired of Di and Muddy Streets.

To any one who has visited cities there brick streets have been censtructed it is only necessary to call attention to the fact to have them at once declare in favor of this class of street construction.

But, as there are many persons who have not had the opportunity to see and examine streets of this kind, it may be necessary to say a few words.

In the first place, under the present system of macadamized streets it is just that the brick street is the very best that has so far been tried. The cost of construction in the less four years has fallen at least one-third, and that brings it within the possibility of cities of our class.

Our streets cost, for the fiscal year ending June 1st, 1895, close to $8,000, and that too, with but very little benefit. Now why not let the City Council arrange to build so much brick street out of the bulk of this money, which is expended very year?

In the course of a few years most if not all the streets of our city would be thoroughly reconstructed with this ele-gant and lasting material. When once this is done, but very little repairing will need to be done for many years

Brick streets add to the health and cleanliness of any city that has them.
When it rains they wash off perfectly clean, and there is no resultant mud to clean, and there is no resultant mud to haul away. When it is dry there is, comparatively, no dust; and what little there is can be readily gotten rid of by the use of the sprinking hose. Ordinarily in the portion of the city not much traveled, and residence portions, the rains keep the streets well cleaned. The writer has seen streets of this kind in use in many of the principal cities of this country, as far West even as Lincoln, Neb., and nowhere did he hear a word adia against them. They add materially to the appearance of a city, doing away with mud and dirt, and giving everything a tidy look.
